WWF-Indonesia's Strategy on Palm Oil Sector Reform

WWF Indonesia is managing a huge range of programmatic activities including: conservation management, sustainable land use, sector reform and sustainable conservation financing. Sustainable Palm Oil Program runs the intervention on palm oil under sector reform and have built linkages with national or field-based programs. The closest crosscutting point is with the Heart of Borneo where is focusing its targets and milestones on Green Economy in Kutai Barat.

WWF Indonesia's "Sector Reform" sets a strategic intervention with the target "RSPO certification scheme is adopted as mainstream in palm oil and biofuel sectors in Kalimantan, Sumatra and Papua".

The growth of the palm oil industry requires forest conversion. Yet, poor land-use planning means that plantations are put in the wrong places – in areas of high conservation value (HCV). Therefore WWF Indonesia pursues the following goals for Indonesia's palm oil industry:

- By 2015, no HCV areas are converted by members of the Roundtable for Sustainable Palm Oil (RSPO) and 50% of HCV areas are well protected, with at least five major growers implementing best management practices as a result of RSPO enrollment;
- By 2020, no natural forests are converted by the palm oil sector.

In broad terms, we will pursue these goals by (1) supporting sustainable palm oil production through RSPO certification and (2) working to revise Indonesia's land-use planning so that HCV areas are no longer converted for plantation, including no plantations on peat land, in riparian areas, or on community land rights areas, except when so requested by the communities themselves.
